Mayor Gillian Aldridge OAM
December 2024

We're pleased to present the latest issue of Salisbury Aware. Our magazine reflects the many exciting aspects of the future here in the City of Salisbury.

Inside, you'll find features on the events, projects, and people that make this community thrive, along with stories that showcase our efforts to strengthen connections among businesses, residents, and organisations who are working together for a better City.

In this issue, we launch our new City Plan 2040, which comes at a time of great opportunity for the area.

We also celebrate the 25th birthday of Mawson Lakes; have a sneak preview of an exciting new Community Grant; and we meet Vikki Thompson, an award-winning author who calls Para Hills home.

Mayor Gillian Aldridge OAM at the newly opened SHANX Mini Golf - Little Para Golf Course.

'I love the fact that we have so much going on — we truly are building a community that is progressive, sustainable and connected!'

Delivering a progressive, sustainable, and connected City of Salisbury

Adelaide's north, including the City of Salisbury, is set to become the epicentre of economic and social growth in Adelaide over the next 30 years.

The potential for Adelaide's north is outlined in the Government of South Australia's draft Greater Adelaide Regional Plan (GARP) and the City of Salisbury's ambitious City Plan 2040 released in November.

The GARP and the City Plan are highly aligned in their ambition and aim to capitalise on an unprecedented merging of opportunities which will mean more jobs, more housing, and a thriving community.

With its relatively young and diverse population of 148,000, the City of Salisbury generates 7% of the state's Gross Domestic Product, but this is expected to grow significantly.

The City is uniquely placed for growth, with substantial available land for new, larger-scale industry; a strong and expanding defence and manufacturing base; and unprecedented investment in housing and revitalising the Salisbury City Centre.

A Draft City Plan 2040 was released mid-2024 for community consultation. Feedback from a range of people with diverse interests and backgrounds, alongside ongoing and endorsed initiatives, reinforced the priorities and key directions of the City Plan.

'The community feedback showed we all want a city that is welcoming and liveable,' says Mayor Gillian Aldridge OAM.

With the $200 million Salisbury City Centre mixed use redevelopment already announced, the City Plan ensures the Council is looking at how it can further boost the availability of a diverse range of housing across the City of Salisbury area.

That housing is going to be needed as the City Plan also sets its sights on significant potential employment growth.

The City Plan also acknowledges the importance of looking after the wellbeing of the community and welcoming a continued growth in and knowledge of the community's diversity.

Environmental sustainability is also a key issue, with the Council progressing on a Climate Change Adaptation Action Plan. This is informed by a recently completed risk assessment and will ensure that the City's infrastructure and assets are resilient to a changing climate.

Mayor Aldridge says, 'The City of Salisbury is well placed compared with many other metropolitan councils, in that we have substantial land available to support current and future economic development; we are investing significantly in growing our housing and economic activity; and we have excellent and growing recreational assets and experiences that support a healthy community.

'The City Plan recognises a major need for housing — especially affordable and diverse housing. To support this, we are investing in housing developments along the Walkleys Road Corridor and at Lake Windemere. We also are working with the state government on their plan to deliver 10,000 homes at Dry Creek.

'We also are focused on tapping into employment growth opportunities presented by available land west of Port Wakefield Road. That land is of significant strategic advantage and is attracting widespread interest from investors on top of the substantial and growing defence industry presence in our city.'

To learn more about the City Plan 2040, visit the salisbury.sa.gov.au/cityplan2040

'The vision remains to have a progressive, sustainable, and connected city. In essence, one that provides the homes, jobs, community support, services, and activities that help a community thrive.'

Happy birthday to Mawson Lakes

They say time moves fast, but it's hard to believe Mawson Lakes has turned 25.

Image credit: Katarina Husakova Photography

'It only seems yesterday when we were talking about the creation of Mawson Lakes,'

— Mayor Gillian Aldridge OAM.

'It was carefully planned and provided real impetus to the revitalisation of the City of Salisbury.'

In 1998, the Delfin and Lend Lease consortium partnered with the Government of South Australia and the City of Salisbury to redevelop the area into a largely self-contained suburb, featuring housing, retail, commercial, and education precincts.

Named in honour of famed explorer, Sir Douglas Mawson, the suburb was previously known as The Levels. It was home to the University of South Australia, which retains an on-site campus, and also Technology Park, established in 1982 as Australia's first science park.

There was a careful approach to the built environment. For example, housing design was controlled by land title restrictions, even including the positioning and appearance of external fixtures such as clotheslines and TV aerials.

A key feature of Mawson Lakes is its multiple water supply systems, with separate mains supply of drinking water and reclaimed wastewater to homes, ornamental lakes filled with natural aquifer water, and the UniSA playing fields and golf course kept green with recycled stormwater harvested from local wetlands.

In the words of then Project Director, the late Kelvin Trimper, 'Mawson Lakes very much was about delivering a total city.'

In the book A Tale of Two Suburbs, Trimper wrote that the intent was to build 'a city of the future', which would make 'living, working, learning and playing easier.'

The partners had a shared vision and benchmarks in respect of social, environmental, economic, IT, learning, and built form.

In his article, Trimper said the project exceeded expectations.

'I think anyone who was involved in those early stages ... could only be, well, I think surprised and delighted with the outcome that's been delivered.'

The private consortium completed its role developing Mawson Lakes in 2011 and transferred management of the suburb to the City of Salisbury.

'We were proud to accept responsibility for Mawson Lakes and are excited to now acknowledge the suburb's 25th birthday,' said Mayor Aldridge.

'The story of Mawson Lakes is not finished,' she believes. 'With the plans for a newly merged Adelaide University and continued expansion of Technology Park, it remains an exciting example of the benefits of comprehensive planning and co-operation between the private sector and all tiers of Government.'

Vikki Wakefield at her Outside In exhibition for SALA Festival at the Salisbury Community Hub.

Award winning writer still calls Salisbury home

Vikki Wakefield has always been a reader and writer at heart, and her heart is in the City of Salisbury.

The awarded author writes fiction for young adults and adults, and she grew up in Para Hills. After a stint away, Vikki returned 18 years ago and remains a local resident.

Not surprisingly, she uses local settings in all her books, 'I am not good at imagining location settings. Although I don't name them, the settings are always recognisable to local readers,' she says.

After a career working in banking, journalism and graphic design, Vikki turned to writing, publishing her first book in 2011. Currently she's working on her eighth book — about women involved in organised crime.

She has done this while being involved in the family manufacturing business and raising her two children. She also finds time to do author talks and enters her artwork in local exhibitions, such as the City of Salisbury's SALA Festival* exhibition held in August at the John Harvey Community Hall.

She says the City of Salisbury helped her find a career in writing.

'I attended the Salisbury Writers Festival and met many other writers. I entered in a session called The First Page and one of the judges liked it so much they said they wanted to read the rest of the book. That gave me confidence and I submitted it to a publisher, Text Publishing, who I am still with.'

Vikki says she has had a 'huge amount of success that she never saw coming,' but also says writing is hard work.

*South Australian Living Artists Festival

'Writing a novel is a long process. I will write upwards of 30 drafts before the final one is ready for publication. I have no mystical talent; it requires dogged bloody-mindedness.'

Vikki at the Salisbury Community Hub library with her second psychological thriller for adults, To the River.

For aspiring writers, she recommends having as much contact and conversation as possible with other writers and people in the literary community.

'I have learnt a huge amount from my editor Penny at Text Publishing. I learn by doing, repeating, failing, and doing again. It also is important to learn to finish.'

She says while her style hasn't changed, what she writes about has; shifting from young adult books to adult crime stories. However, she adds that crime has always been an element in her stories.

You can find Vikki's books in the City of Salisbury's libraries. Her novels include All I Ever Wanted, Ballad for a Mad Girl, which won the 2018 Davitt Award for best young adult novel, This Is How We Change the Ending, which won a Children's Book Council Award in 2020, and To the River, her 2024 adult crime release.

Diversitours by name and nature

Introducing Diversitours, an Australia-first in the City of Salisbury: a walking tour showing the diversity of cultural heritage, languages, and religious influences present in Salisbury.

The City of Salisbury, on the traditional lands of the Kaurna people, is a hub of cultural diversity, making it the perfect location for Australia's first Diversitours project.

Of the City of Salisbury's population, 34.1% were born overseas, compared with 27.6% in Greater Adelaide*. Today, a majority of people with refugee experience arriving in South Australia permanently settle in the Salisbury region.

Diversitours is an initiative of the Intercultural Cities Network, of which the City of Salisbury is an accredited member. Successfully delivered in cities such as Valencia and Bilbao in Spain, Diversitours aims to encourage local residents and visitors to discover, learn and experience the benefits of interculturalism in suburbs with significant cultural diversity.

Local tour guides have been recruited and will assist in identifying routes that best highlight the City's vibrant interculturalism and will lead multi-faceted walking tours for participating locals and tourists.

*according to the 2021 Census.

Ali Raza, business owner of Fresh Bread Bakery in Salisbury.

'I am really excited by the potential of Diversitours to encourage greater understanding and build community connection in the City of Salisbury whilst showcasing our fabulous people and attractions.'

Salisbury takes the lead

In another local first, City of Salisbury is piloting a new model for community support — a social worker in the library.

Increasingly, libraries are being called on to support community with a range of complex needs, and with cost-of-living pressures experienced by many, the City of Salisbury has moved to better support the community and staff by partnering with Sonder to engage an on-site social worker.

The concept of the pilot is for the social worker to act as a liaison for customers who might not engage with, or be aware of, available community supports. The pilot will seek to help connect them with services they need through referrals, and provide support and training to staff, so we can offer extra assistance to our community when needed.

Lizzie, Salisbury Community Hub's new social worker.

The project has been funded by City of Salisbury, with support from the Libraries Board of South Australia, which is interested in understanding how library services across our state may evolve to meet changing community needs.

Sonder, a leading provider of integrated health and community services, has partnered with Council to provide a skilled practitioner to be based at the Hub.

Delivered from a range of centres located across South Australia, Sonder's services provide support across a wide range of areas, including mental health, homelessness, Aboriginal health, alcohol and/or other drugs, employment, community health and disability.

Grant tackles food waste

Shopping centre management and participating food businesses at Parabanks Shopping Centre will take part in an exciting project to tackle emissions from decomposing food waste and create ready to use compost-like material that provides rich nutrients for gardens — with help from the City of Salisbury Community Grants Program funding and Powertech Energy.

The Community Grants Program has been updated to include a new Sustainability category, and Powertech Energy based at Mawson Lakes has been awarded the first grant of this kind.

The City of Salisbury Sustainability Grant supports a trial of Foodie, a fast-composting machine, tapping into food waste from participating businesses at Parabanks.

Image credit: Powertech Energy Pty Ltd

Rapid composting utilises heat and bacteria to reduce the process of composting food waste from a five to six-week process to about 24 hours. The diversion of this food waste from landfill into the Foodie avoids the release of damaging greenhouse gasses due to decomposition in landfill, and creates nutrient rich, compost-like material for gardens.

Parabanks Property Manager, Elizabeth Varas says of the Foodie Trial, 'We are thankful to the City of Salisbury and Powertech Energy for supporting this initiative. We are looking forward to trialing the Foodie machine, to see how food waste from the Centre can be effectively converted into material that can be used in gardens, avoiding collection and transport of what would otherwise be waste.'

Get the dog out for a walk — but don't leave 'poopprints' behind you!

Dog owners Rebecca and Alicia walking their dogs Alfie and Chloe at Canterbury Drive Reserve.

Find your closest dog park, visit salisbury.sa.gov.au/dogpark

Summer and Autumn — warmer weather and a chance to get out for a walk with your dog.

We thought we'd share a few tips to make it more enjoyable:

- Aim for 30-minute walks, at least five times per week.
- Keep your dog on its leash in public areas, unless it's a signed 'off leash' zone.
- Keep a close eye on your dog around young children and other dogs.
- Don't leave 'poopprints' — take a plastic bag to clean up your dog's poo.
- Make sure your dog is registered for easy identification if lost.
- Avoid the hottest part of the day.

The City of Salisbury has several dog-friendly parks where dogs can be exercised off the leash during the day. Check for any park rules or notices and ensure your dog plays in a positive way with others in the area.

Dog Free areas in the City of Salisbury include:

- Fenced playgrounds — the entire area within the fence is dog free.
- Parts of the St Kilda Adventure Playground — signs advise where dogs can and cannot be walked.

Small dog area at the Canterbury Drive Reserve dog park.

Main area at the Canterbury Drive Reserve dog park.

Are you bushfire ready?

Being ready for bushfire risk is crucial in the City of Salisbury, where understanding and preparation are key to ensuring the safety of our community.

All property owners — even in suburban settings* — have a responsibility and are required by legislation to ensure that their property is cleared to reduce the risk of fire outbreaks.

Planning ahead for emergencies is crucial. The Australian Red Cross has useful resources to help you develop your RediPlan.

*State legislation requires owners to make their property bushfire safe to prevent fire being able to spread across their land.

Reduce the risk:

- Remove dead branches, fallen leaves and undergrowth from around buildings.
- Move bark, mulch, woodpiles and other flammable materials from near your home.
- Keep gutters clear of leaves, twigs and debris.
- Cut back trees and branches overhanging the house.
- On bad fire days remove items from around the house that may ignite or blow into windows.

Laura Price and Ruth Denton.

Laura's running for life

Marathon runner Laura Price is in her toughest race — to survive breast cancer — and she has a simple message for women: get yourself tested regularly.

'I was running marathons and perfectly healthy, but I found a lump in June,' Laura says.

'It was a fluke, and it has made me realise the importance of getting regular breast checks.'

Laura has undertaken a course of chemotherapy and is preparing for surgery in December.

'Chemo's been horrible, especially juggling it with full time work and two young kids,' she says.

In the meantime, the support from friend Ruth Denton, her family, friends and members of the Northern Districts Athletics Club, is helping her through. Ruth and Laura have travelled across Australia completing various marathons and parkruns.

Following Laura's diagnosis, Ruth suggested a fundraiser to show support and increase cancer awareness.

Dulux donated $1 for every km completed and the Northern Districts Athletics Club donated $1 for everyone who attended.

'The turnout blew my mind,' says Laura. 'The money is great, but more importantly, we have increased community awareness about cancer.'

The City of Salisbury regularly hosts the BreastScreen SA bus (mobile unit) which offers free breast screening services.

Growing for Gold — opening doors to sport

The City of Salisbury's Growing for Gold sports program helps kids find a sport they love.

Growing for Gold offers a wide range of free sporting experiences for young people aged 3 to 16 annually during the term 3 school holidays.

Pinky Armstrong, a local mother, has seen her teenage sons, Henry and Hunter, thrive thanks to Growing for Gold.

After exploring a variety of sports through the program, the family formed a strong bond with the Salisbury Tennis Club, where they've been actively involved ever since.

Henry is particularly passionate about his weekly volunteer work with the Salisbury Tennis Coaching program for people with disabilities. Through this, he's also earning volunteer hours for The University of Adelaide's Children's University program.

Pinky says the family absolutely love the club and the positive and safe environment created by coaches such as Yvonne Briggs. The boys never miss a match or a volunteering opportunity.

For the Armstrong family, the connection they've found with the Salisbury Tennis Club all began with that first step — registering for the Growing for Gold program.

Complementing the Growing for Gold program is the Government of South Australia's Sports Vouchers program, offering $100 off club fees. The vouchers are accepted by a range of providers across the City of Salisbury, expanding in 2025 to provide additional cost relief and more activities than previous years.

From January, it will increase to two vouchers per calendar year for children from reception to year 9, and will be valid for music lessons, alongside the already available sports, dance, swim school, Scouts, and Guides, all of which are offered in our council area.

In the past five years, Council has invested over $40 million in sporting and recreational facilities, including the recently opened Salisbury Aquatic Centre and the Bridgestone Athletics Centre — a key training base and home to three Athletics Clubs.

City works

As part of our ongoing commitment to ensuring a connected community, we've been working on road resealing projects, upgrading shared use paths, and replacing the Pratt Avenue Bridge.

Road resealing

Our Road Reseal Continuity Program involves regular resealing to enhance the quality, safety, and longevity of our local roads, while reducing long-term maintenance costs and minimising disruptions to residents and businesses. It also reflects our commitment to sustainability by incorporating recycled materials and advanced construction methods to reduce environmental impact.

Shared use paths

Recent upgrades to shared use paths in Mawson Lakes have enhanced safety, accessibility, and connectivity for pedestrians and cyclists.

As part of the Asphalt Shared Use Paths Service Continuity Program, the renewal creates a smoother, more reliable path network, making it easier for residents to connect with nearby destinations and encouraging a more active lifestyle.

Pratt Avenue Bridge

The replacement of the Pratt Avenue Bridge in Pooraka is on track for completion by the end of 2024. Originally built to meet the needs of an earlier era, the bridge is being replaced with a modern structure to enhance traffic flow, pedestrian accessibility, and community connectivity.

Once completed, the new bridge will serve as a vital link in Pooraka and strengthen the area's transport network.

Celebrating a renewed connection with Japan's Mobara City

Japanese culture has been the focus of celebrations in the City of Salisbury amid a visit from leaders of Mobara City.

City of Salisbury Mayor Gillian Aldridge OAM and Mobara City Mayor Atushi Ichihara committed to maintaining our Sister City agreement, which was formally established in 2002.

Several key events were held to coincide with the visit of the Mobara City leaders, including Matsuri on Mobara festival at Mobara Park in Mawson Lakes, and the opening of Pilgrim: A Japanese-Australian Art Journey, a cross-cultural art exhibition that ran throughout November at Salisbury Community Hub.

For more info, visit salisbury.sa.gov.au/oursistercity

Mobara City is located in the Chiba Prefecture, about 60 kilometres south-east of Tokyo. It has about 90,000 residents in a total area of 100 square kilometres.

The two cities share the same longitude and have the same degrees of latitude from the equator.

Since establishing the relationship in 2002, there have been a number of interactions, including hosting of students and teachers from schools in Mobara City and a baseball exchange program.
